City diversity is an important indicator to evaluate the service function of the urban ecosystem, which is important to maintain the ecological security and ecological balance of cities and improve the urban habitat. One of the factors that maintain urban habitat is cultural diversity.

Cultural diversity refers to diversity or the quality of different cultures, as opposed to monocultures, global monocultures, or the homogenization of cultures, similar to cultural evolution. It also refers to having different cultures respect each other's differences. Cultural diversity means the balance to be achieved and the protection of "cultural minorities" considered to be endangered. "Cultural preservation" or "cultural exceptions" defends the social vision of culture against its commercialization.

In this issue, we will focus on the topic of cultural diversity which occupies an important place in city diversity today for the promotion of public cultural services and equal development in the region. It is our great pleasure to have the articles of Dr. Shaohui Lee, Dr. Yun Zhuang, etc. published in our journal. They deeply discuss the relations between cultural diversity and economic growth, education, housing price, ethnicity, employment, etc.
